Income Tax Payer Who Lists Payer Winnings

Los Angeles, Calif., April 5.—Diogenes may now put up his lantern. The honest man has been found. And he plays poker, too. It may not be generally known but there is a provision in the internal revenue law which provides that all winnings at poker, other card games, or gambling of any kind, shall be reported as income. Losses, however, may not be deducted.

Arthur O. Kriete, former prohibition inspector, and now a revenue, bond and income tax expert, with offices in the International Bank Building, reported that among his income tax clients was a man who declares himself winner of $200 in poker games. He said he wished to include this in his statement of his income.

GILBERT WRITES

mation I have secured concerning it. My information was obtained from the Department of Agriculture.

The three principal sources of domestic hemp are Kentucky, Wisconsin and California. Kentucky led in production until 1917 and since then Wisconsin has led. California has produced some hemp from time to time but has never had any suitable for domestic consumption but has exported her product. The reports are that there will be a reduction of acreage in Wisconsin this year but an increased production in California where they will attempt to produce hemp for domestic consumption.

There is no quotation at present for Kentucky rough hemp. Wisconsin hemp is quoted at 14c. Reports from buyers indicate there is no great demand for Kentucky hemp this year. The following are principal buyers of Kentucky rough hemp:

Columbian Rope Co., Auburn, New York.
Hooven & Allison, Xenia, O.
R. A. Kelly Co., Xenia, O.
Linen Thread Co., 95 Franklin street, New York City.
Jacobs Cordage Co., Cincinnati.
Ludlow Manufacturing Association, 111 Devonshire street, Boston, Mass.
Hanover Cordage Co., Hanover, Penn.

Chelsea Fibre Mills, 1155 Manhattan avenue, New York City.
American Manufacturing Company, Noble and West streets, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Whitlock Cordage Co., 46 South street, New York City.

In 1921 about 3,000 acres of hemp were grown in Kentucky. It is estimated that this crop will yield about 1,000 to 1,200 tons of fibre. The drought of last season cut down the growth of the plants and this will result in somewhat less than a normal yield of fibre. The acreage of 1920 was less than that of 1921.

The total area devoted to hemp in the United States last season was about 11,500 acres. Very little of this fibre has been marketed thus far, and there is also approximately 40 per cent of the fibre from the crop of 1920 still unsold. Before the war the average annual production of hemp in the United States was 8,000 tons.

In 1920 and 1921 the crops of jute in India were very much below the normal. The production of jute in 1921 is estimated at about 4,000,000 bales of 400 pounds each, while the normal world consumption before the war was about 8,000,000 bales annually.

Russia before the war was also a large producer of hemp but of course, it is now producing none for exportation, if any at all. Reports indicate that the accumulated surplus of jute fibre is nearly exhausted and that the production of the last two years will scarcely be sufficient to supply the trade, even on a reduced manufacturing basis. This condition has resulted in advancing prices of jute fibre during the past three months. Another competing fibre produced in India is sunn. This fibre is inferior to jute and decidedly inferior to hemp, but in appearance, it is very similar to hemp, and in the market it is commonly called "sunn hemp" and by the time it reaches the retail trade the "sunn" is lost. This fibre has been imported into the United States in large quantities in recent years. During the past year, however, a very small crop of sunn was produced in India and there will be comparatively little available for export. The present competing fibres with hemp therefore are available only in small quantities and with a gradually increasing demand for strong twines, there seems likely to be a better demand for hemp fibre. There are recent inquiries for this fibre from Europe but present freight rates amounting to about 2 cents a pound, make the most of export ing the fibre to Europe almost prohibitive.

The foreign importation usually is around 6,000 tons annually. During the war this dwindled to about one-half this amount. After the war it went up but last year only about 3,000 tons were imported. Practically all of this came from Italy. Italian hemp is a slightly better grade of hemp than ours, and at present, rates from Italy to New York are cheaper than freight rates from Kentucky to New York.

It seems that the main reason Kentucky hemp has brought a lower price than Wisconsin and Italian hemp is that it is not dressed as well as that hemp. In Wisconsin the hemp growers are organized and have plants for the dressing of their hemp. Their hemp is no better than Kentucky hemp. Hemp seed comes practically altogether from Kentucky. One can see from the gradual growth in production and price in Wisconsin the benefit of organization.

In my opinion I see no reason why the middle man or speculators should set the price for hemp in Kentucky. The main reason is that the individual grower is not in a position to supply a sufficient amount to any big company who buy in car loads. If there was an organization it seems to me that this could be eliminated data could be obtained and kept on hand with information as to what demand there would be for the fibre, etc. Also if there was no demand here foreign markets could be investigated and the organization could be in a position to do this through our representatives in foreign countries, better freight rates would be gotten.

The International Harvester Company does not pay the same rates for jute, out of which they make binder twine, as the growers have to pay when they ship their hemp. Kentucky hemp is used mainly for commercial twines. A little for weaving carpets but with introduction of put this forced hemp from the market. Binder twine, of course, is made out of cheaper grades of fibre, jute, sisal, etc.

As I wrote you at the beginning of this very lengthy communication, it was through requests for information of this sort by Mr. Feland that I went into the subject so fully and I began to realize what it would mean to hemp growers of my district, in my opinion, if they would perfect an organization for the handling and selling of their product. I wish you would lay this letter and suggestion before your bureau and communicate to me your views on the matter. I am communicating with other hemp growers in my district relative to this matter and will be glad to give all the assistance I can and enlist the assistance of the departments here. I believe the newspapers would be glad to open their columns to distribute this information.

Assuring you of my great desire to be of service, I am, Sincerely,
RALPH GILBERT.
